What is a IGF?

- The initiative is a global effort operating under the auspices of the UN.

- The idea of the initiative is to gather all interested parties in one place so they can participate equally in discussions about issues important for internet governance.

- The IGF does not have decision-making authority, nor does it issue binding acts, but its results can influence processes that have binding effects.

- By its conclusions and by drawing attention to issues it deems important, the IGF can influence decision-makers and thus participate in shaping the official stance or public policy.

- The IGF is fully open to participation by all interested parties.

CRO-IGF

- The Croatian National IGF was established in 2015.

- Croatia is among the first countries in the wider region to have successfully established a national IGF, thereby clearly aligning itself with countries that advocate for the aforementioned multi-stakeholder model of internet governance.

- The national IGF provides an opportunity to openly discuss topics relevant to Croatia concerning the area of internet governance (infrastructure and standardization, legal aspects of internet regulation, economic, developmental, and socio-cultural aspects).
